

Christopher Adolph is Associate Professor of Political Science and Adjunct Associate Professor of Statistics at the University of Washington, Seattle, where he is also a core faculty member of the Center for Statistics and the Social Sciences. His book, Bankers, Bureaucrats, and Central Bank Politics: The Myth of Neutrality (Cambridge University Press), won the International Political Science Association's Charles H. Levine Prize for best contribution in comparative public policy and administration. He is a former Robert Wood Johnson Scholar in Health Policy Research and won the American Political Science Association's Mancur Olson Award for best dissertation in political economy. His research on comparative political economy and quantitative methods has appeared in American Political Science Review, Political Analysis, Social Science & Medicine, World Development, and other academic journals.