More on Idealism Day 21 Today—lecture first, discussion second. On Monday we talked about how Kant laid a foundation for German Idealism and Romanticism— What were were his two key contributions in that regard?

 A radical doctrine of free will— Nature as the enemy (IB 88-89)
2. 2.The Copernican Revolution
 Transcendental Ego A priori categories
The categories were transcendent and universal by virtue of being attributes of the "transcendental" Ego or Self.

Two things awe me most, the starry sky above me and the moral law within me.

(Immanuel Kant)

izquotes.com

(So this is all very much in the Western axial, disembedding tradition.)

The two together constitute an active, World-Constituting Ego

So mind for Kant and those who follow him is primary— Matter—Nature—is just the passive stuff the mind works on.
(Very much in the nominalist/ voluntarist tradition tracing back to the 1300s.)
So once this transcendental ego is posited as a transcultural foundation for truth and right— custom, convention, culture can be judged as deficient by this transcendental standard.

Culture and custom are baggage that should be thrown off the bus so that people can live freely in alignment with their innate sense of what is true and good.
Let's talk a little more about Schiller, Fichte, and Schelling.
Schiller picks up on the Freedom and Will theme as Resistance/Defiance. Fichte picks up on the Resistance & World-Constituting Ego theme.

S	chiller is about the individual pitting
	imself against both Nature and Duty
	Of being free from—or transcending —both to be able to choose in a way hat is not determined by either:
	,
V C	Ve obey only the laws of our own reation—
R	Refuse to submit to any external uthority, whether the authority of God, Nature, or Man.
lo	deals not discovered or intuited
	as for the Renaissance elites) out freely invented in acts of creative olay—

Spieltrieb and Beauty On the Aesthetic Education of Man (See Berlin pp 99ff)
if only we can convert the necessity of obeying rules into some kind of instinctive, perfectly free, harmonious, spontaneous, natural operation; if we can only do that, we are saved.
Idea of the Superfluous Human— Operating completely outside what is valued or useful for society.

Being sensible or practical is the worst thing you could be.
Failing is the strongest indicator that you have succeeded.
Cordelia in King Lear foreshadows this refusal to do what is expected of her and letting the chips fall where they may.
Who would Schiller find more worthy —Sean or Gerry in GWH?
,

It assumes that the free person is in touch with his or her deepest, true self This traces back to Rousseau's inner voice of conscience that Taylor talks about—Conscience! Conscience! Divine instinct, immortal voice from heaven; sure guide for a creature ignorant and finite indeed, yet intelligent and free; infallible judge of good and evil, making man like to God! In thee consists the excellence of man's nature and the morality of his actions; apart from thee, I find nothing in myself to raise me above the beasts— nothing but the sad privilege of wandering from one error to another, by the help of an unbridled understanding and a reason which knows no Conscience is not the same as Freud's
"superego".

This in not Renaissance Neoplatonism, but can you see how it kind of is?
Return of the Divine Human after its rejection by the Reformation and Enlightenment rationalism.
Rousseau anti-social conventions,— anti-tribal code
but he's still a theist—
This divine voice is still grounded in an idea of axial transcendence.
idea of axial if ansectidence.
This is where Kant get his idea of the transcendental ego and the moral law.

In other words, the free human being is truly free to the degree that his will is aligned with transcendent law, which is discerned by the conscience-awakened heart.
But the Romantics who come a generation or two later are mostly not grounded in anything—
They celebrate the groundlessness of existence.
They affirm an idea of Spirit—but see it as this shapeless, fathomless, bottomless, open-ended, 'immanent', creative energy.

Fichte picks up on Schiller's idea about transgressing conventions, but combines it with Herder's idea of the folk spirit.
You should be familiar with Berlin's discussion of — • expressionism • belonging to a volk • the incompatibility of cultural ideals (pp 67ff)
Fichte sees himself as an individual spark "belonging" to this larger spiritual flame that is the spirit of the German nation.

So the individualist theme is suppressed in the folk-spirit theme— Neo-tribalism that leads to 19th Century nationalism, and eventually National Socialism
But this comes later— He starts by talking about the Ego— the l—and how it comes into self- realization only when it is resisted.
We live in our world in a dreamlike unconscious, instinctual way until we come up against some obstacle or threat. Frustration and fear heighten awareness—wake us up— to both the existence of the object but also to the existence of oneself.

This foreshadows Hegel's thesis and antithesis, the dynamic that gets consciousness and history rolling.
So for Fichte it follows that the more continuously we are in a state of conflict, the more heightened our consciousness.
Conflict is good. (Not a new idea: Empedocles d. mid 5th Century BCE)

Without the not-self, no sense of the Self—Without the Self, no sense of the not-self.
It's their opposition that provokes self awareness.
The more aware we are of resistant otherness, the more aware we become of ourselves.
If you're not involved in a struggle, you're not alive.

Fichte wants a philosophy of life, and the pursuit of knowledge for the enrichment of life— this cannot be achieved by contemplation, but only by action. Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am. It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling itself against that which opposes it.	So Kant's and Schiller's doctrine of the Will is pushed even further and combined with an idea of continuous action.
this cannot be achieved by contemplation, but only by action. Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am. It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling this cannot be achieved by contemplation, but only by action. Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am. It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
this cannot be achieved by contemplation, but only by action. Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am. It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling	Fichte wants a philosophy of life, and
this cannot be achieved by contemplation, but only by action. Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am. It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling	the pursuit of knowledge for the enrichment of life—
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling	this cannot be achieved by
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
It's not about thinking; it's about action. Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling
Personality—authentic selfhood—only developed by the human will hurling	Volo ergo sum—I will therefore I am.
developed by the human will hurling	It's not about thinking; it's about action.
	developed by the human will hurling

What is the will if it is not realized in continuous choices and actions.
Foreshadows "Triumph of the Will" theme developed by Nazis.
Fichte hates the static philosophical system.

Very similar idea developed by American Pragmatists, C.S. Peirce and American Pragmatists, C.S. Peirce and William James—
But without all the Geist-iness.
Will and action precede knowledge—vviii and action precede knowledge—
We know because we act.
(Marxist praxis first, then reflection)
It's not about book smarts; it's about street smarts.

In other words, the only kind of knowledge—truth—that's worth having is the knowledge that comes from experience of struggle in the world.
Epistemological implications—
Things are what they are because of the way that we use them— Not as they exist as de-contextualized objects—

What matters about a thing is not it's Platonic essence, but its meaning in the context of our day-to-day existence.
This is the point made by Roszak in the excerpt I posted on the website.
Objective knowledge is useless for living, and it's not all that useful for living, and it's not all that useful for understanding what is real in the world.
What matters is the meaning things have from our interacting with them, our relationships with them.
Freedom is a spiritual attribute, but the individual spirit is part of something bigger—a nation, sect, class.
So groups have the same responsibility to self-realize as the individual.

As the individual ego is in conflict with its 'not-self', so must the collective ego of the nation—the Urvolk— be in conflict with other nations, the Outsiders. Fichte's "Speeches to the German Nation"
Napoleon is a perfect exemplar of this action/will philosophy as it functions for the French nation.
Sounds chauvinistic, and whatever Fichte's intent, it's easily taken as such.

A word about Schelling—
A word about scriening—If Kant and Fichte were more in the stream of the Voluntarists—(Living mind imposes itself on inert, dead matter)
Schelling is more in the stream of the Renaissance Neoplatonists—(all of creation is alive because it participates in the Divine Mind) but with an interesting twist.

Nature is unconscious mind.
It is continuously striving for self- consciousness.
So Nature produces its forms not from action imposed on it from outside or from a transcendent source—
But from within its own powers.
Nature starts in brute unconsciousness, but gradually becomes conscious of itself.
How?
In and through human consciousness.
(Could this explain something like the (Could this explain something like the Axial age?)

Nature is	s unconscious will—
the huma	an being is Nature's will come to consci	ousness of itself.

So it's the	rough the human being that a higher	e universe gradually comes to consciousness of itself.
(Retrieve	es Renaissance idea of the human b things''.)	eing as the ''measure of all ti iii igo .)
Natura is	s therefore the human unconsci
The indiv	vidual human consciousness floats atc continuo	op this fathomless abyss that is usly striving to become s of itself through human consciou	s of itself through human beings.

This is an early idea of evolution, but evolution driven not by random, groping, material processes, but by a groping Spirit—Geist—in the universe striving to become aware of itself.
Romanticism as 'spilt religion'
Geist is the Idealists substitute for the theistic God of revelation.

Religious feeling and longing without the constraint of actually believing in anything specific—
No doctrine because all doctrines are static and limiting.
God—Geist—isn't up in some transcendent timeless realm—he's become immanentized, working in history, striving for higher levels of self awareness through human beings—God isn't dead;
he's gone underground—

Not found up and out there, but down and in here—in the fathomless depths of Being—but also in the fathomless depths of the human soul.
Harrait 30ai.
Nature is no longer just inert stuff—
It's suffused with the divine—
And so is the human being divine because she is where divine nature becomes conscious of itself becomes conscious of fiscal
-
The human being is in herself grounded in this infinite, and so longs for deeper sense of connection to the infinite—Connection to the inimite

To recover it, would effect the reenchantment of the world
This idea of immanentized God in the depths of Nature/Being is a dynamic Spirit shaping history— Opposite of the static Clockmaker God, the deus absconditus of the Enlightenment deists.
Suffusing Romanticism is this longing for the infinite—a kind of nostalgia;

Man is a fallen god who remembers heaven. —Alfred de Musset Platonic anamnesis? References a dimly remembered eternity from which we came and to which we return.
This infinity always escapes our ability to capture it, hold it, even to describe it—

Language is a cracked kettle on which we beat out tunes for bears to dance to, while all the while we long to melt the stars. —Gustave Flaubert Longing for the infinite— This is the counterpoint to the world as static, grinding machine that dominated the Enlightenment social imaginary.
Group discussion— Take all the time you want.	