

Extra Credit Criteria

As mentioned earlier in the quarter, I will allow up to 5 points extra credit (1 point per mistake) for those students who find examples of usage mistakes pointed out in P. T. O'Conner's book. But not everything is acceptable. Here are the criteria I will use:

- Typos don't count. If it's the kind of mistake that someone just didn't catch and would know was wrong right away as soon as it was pointed out, it doesn't count.
- Badly written sentences don't count unless they illustrate a particular usage problem from O'Conner or discussed in class. '
- Punctuation errors can count, but it has to be an egregious mistake, such as a comma splice or using a semicolon where a colon should be used.
- Signage used in billboard advertisements or for retailing purposes doesn't count. Copy in magazine advertisements doesn't count.
- No submissions will be accepted after the last office hour before the oral presentations begin. I want this to be an exercise that motivates you to be alert to everything you read throughout the quarter, not something you do as a special project to improve your grade at the end of the quarter.

In order to obtain the extra credit, you need to show me the mistake by bringing in the printed source or photocopying the page on which the mistake occurred and then indicate on what page in PTO the mistake is discussed.
