The designated management system began in 2003. Using this system, designated manager had been expected to make city parks more comfortable spaces with various citizens' involvement. But private enterprises had not been supposed to have enough experiences of cooperation with citizens. Also, citizens had been supposed that they might be anxious about the park management by private enterprises. Therefore, to make clear what is necessary for these designated managers to build good relationship with citizens' groups, I investigated how these designated managers have tried to cooperate with citizens' groups and how citizens' groups evaluated these managers' works.

As a result, I made clear that these managers could be divided in three groups by situation with citizens' groups and each group was work pattern to make good relationship.
