The research involved in presentations, role-plays, and profiles should go beyond looking at film reviews and director interview on the web. Depending upon your focus, you will search for autobiographies, books and articles authored by film scholars, or newspaper and magazine articles written when a film debuted. The University of Washington Libraries' cinema studies research guide provides an excellent starting point for finding books, articles, encyclopedias, and web resources for your optional assignments. Not only does the guide offer useful terms for catalog and database searches, but it also lists book titles and call numbers for general reference sources. Moreover, it links directly to key databases. You can access the guide online at http://www.lib.washington.edu/subject/CinemaStudies. Below are other sources for finding specific types of information.
